

WILLIAMS FINANCIAL ADVISORS, L.L.C.

Service. Trust. The Lifestyle You've Imagined.

Why go to Wall Street when Wall Street comes to us?

The professionals at Williams Financial Advisors are regularly sought out by the local media and have recently attracted attention from the national financial media as well.

Over the past few months, Tommy Williams has provided commentary on a wide variety of financial topics. See what he had to say:

“I think a short term look at long term matters is a little off base. It’s a great time to be optimistic and if you look at the fundamentals they are all pointing to a higher market and a greater economy.”

“Investors are still plowing funds into shorter-dated notes and bills, showing that Treasuries are still really more than an investment, or a place where people are looking for return on their money.”

-Tommy Williams provided his perspective of the Treasury markets in an interview with Reuters

“I think we are in for tough haul here over the very near term. But I think that will turn in time, and I think that some triggering events will make that happen.”

“The credit crunch had looked like it was thawing near the end of last year, but now that seems to have slowed down. We knew that the fourth quarter was terrible, but the details are just now being reported.”

-Tommy Williams expressed his views of the markets in a late January interview with CNNMoney

“I think it is tough to gauge the success of the President at this point. The administration has had some missteps, but it is an incredibly complex issue. I think we have to look back and let history actually make that sort of judgment.”
